Z. Z. Z. Johnson, a colored brother of rich chocolate hue, did not attend the dinner in search of political uplift, but for the simple purpose of earning his pay as a professional entertainer. He so loved his art, did Zuyver Zebenezer so loved his art, did Zuyver Zebenezer Zadoc, that he spread himself generously over the programme of the dollar dinner, and in listening to his tweetlings and syncopations one missed quite often parts of the speeches delivered by Plain Bill and Plain Bill's newest colliter, all and Plain Bill's newest weeks. newest political ally, Frank Moss. So that, as has been said, the dinner was Rather more than 300 persons tucked their feet under the small tables in the main dining room of the Broadway Central to enjoy what the Great Impeached said was the finest meal, sir, he had ever eater. The usual things that had ever eaten. The usual things that go with a dollar dinner went with Plain Bill's affair last night.

Eating tobacco was not included in the menu. Mr. Sulzer thoughtfully brought a private supply and enjoyed it in a fashion which might be described as care free but perhaps a bit casual. The waiters who served him where he sat with almost sepulchral dignity at the centre of the guest table seemed. while he was enjoying his favorite des-sert, to approach and depart in a series of short, wary sprints.

Mr. Moss, coming in late, had considerable to say about "your splendid leader, Mr. Sulzer," at which Plain Bill almost made out to look bashful as he tugged at his Henry Clay forelock and champed hard on old Kentucky plug.
